Sony In-Ear Headphones A7 (Europe) Call it what you want, U by Thomas Schwing may be the greatest all-in-one sound card so far. The company that laid the foundation for theremin and the PAQ-40 stereo toy, U is still going strong after being on the market since 1972. Most of the time, he just wants to work on his art, but this week, it was an epic day at the park. While Patrick Weikert snapped a few photos of the action, we had the opportunity to sit down with U and ask a few questions. What's the story behind your "name"? U was derived from the concept of the Aural. When it was first prototyped in the mid-50s, the crew worked under the alias of "The Aural Secretaries" (AKA "The Elementor"). The team evolved into "U" after a merger between the "U" and "Aural" teams. In the early 60s, the "U" team was working on the PAQ-40, which was the only transistorised stand-alone stereophonic toy available at the time. What was it like to see "The Beatles" live in the mid-1960s? According to U's then-girlfriend, who was also working in the group, it was U's dream to meet them. They had just put out their first album A Hard Day's Night. What was it like to meet the famous Alan Freed, who was a big influence on U? Alan was a gentleman. There was no pretence about U. When he went backstage, he'd just want to work. Which is
